Real Estate Issues Top List of Legal Service Requests

Arizona-based lawyer Charles E. Davis said the numbers represent just the "tip of the iceberg" when it comes to the public need for affordable legal services. "Too often, people with common problems like foreclosure, credit or collection issues wait too long to deal with these issues. A preemptive approach sometimes saves a lot of money and much anguish and heartache," Davis said.

"The economy is still in the doldrums, people are losing their jobs — and conditions couldn't be better for Ada-based Pre-Paid Legal. At least that's the outlook for CEO Harland Stonecipher, whose company saw net income rise 6 percent the first half of 2009 with cash flow of $35 million, up 28 percent."

Foreclose Tops List of Legal Woes
Amy S. Choi

In 2009, real estate-related issues including foreclosures and landlord and tenant disputes topped the list of requests at Pre-Paid Legal Services. Some 358,000 consumers sought answers to their real estate questions from the organization ... The number of people seeking foreclosure help is probably ten times what it was two or three years ago," Charles E. Davis, managing partner of Mesa, Arizona-based Davis Miles, a member of Pre-Paid Legal, told Housing Watch.

"It's been said there's nothing more powerful than an idea whose time has come. Sometimes that idea can reshape an entire industry. Having access to legal counsel from one central and trusted source is important. Having an ongoing relationship with a law firm that is tested on its performance and client service is exceptional. Having access to these services at an affordable, predictable fee structure is invaluable."

Studies have shown that employees who are satisfied with their benefits tend to be more satisfied with their jobs in general. Proponents of prepaid legal plan benefits say access to legal services tends to reduce employee absenteeism because employees can get the services they need. They don't need to miss work to sort out their legal affairs.
